

H-1B immigrants are immigrants who hold at least bachelors degrees.

The average H-1B immigrant who leaves the country after his visa expires pays $52,000 into Social Security and never takes retirement benefits.

Source: Office of Immigration Statistics, Department of Homeland Security; Statistical Abstract of the United States, Bureau of the Census

The average H-1B immigrant who stays in the U.S. pays more into Social Security than he takes out in retirement benefits.

Source: Office of Immigration Statistics, Department of Homeland Security; Statistical Abstract of the United States, Bureau of the Census; Social Security Administration

Are H-1B immigrants a drain on Social Security?

Every H-1B immigrant who leaves the country when his visa expires contributes a net positive of more than $50,000 to Social Security (in present value terms).

Every H-1B immigrant who remains in the country contributes a net positive of more than $250,000 to Social Security (in present value terms).